

DEPOSITARY RECEIPTS

Providing investors, brokers and issuers access to global markets

THE DEPOSITARY RECEIPTS OPPORTUNITY

The Depositary Receipts (DRs) product is a negotiable security providing investors, brokers and issuers with a more convenient way to invest in global securities. With growing investor appetite for diversification, DRs offer a unique opportunity for issuers looking to expand their investor base, promote brand awareness, or raise capital. Whether you are looking to have your shares traded over-the-counter or listed on U.S. or European stock exchanges, DRs provide a powerful solution for companies seeking global reach. With American Depositary Receipts (ADRs) and Global Depositary Receipts (GDRs), issuers can easily tap into the vast pool of investors looking to diversify their portfolios.

DRs solve the challenges investors face when buying shares in foreign companies, providing an easy and accessible way to invest in companies located in different regions and markets. From startups to large multinational corporations, DRs offer a convenient way to increase your liquidity, diversify your shareholder base and enhance your visibility in the global market.

	Benefits to Issuers	Benefits to Investors
Access	Access to a wider pool of investors: By listing DRs issuers can tap into a larger pool of investors who may not have access to the issuer's domestic market and increase their visibility and exposure to analysts.	Easy access: DRs provide investors with a convenient and accessible way to invest in foreign companies without the need to navigate complex foreign markets or currency exchange systems.
Liquidity	Increased liquidity: DRs help increase liquidity by providing a more convenient and accessible way for investors to trade the issuer's shares.	Liquidity: DRs can offer higher liquidity compared to foreign shares due to the greater number of investors and the ability to trade during U.S. market hours.
Diversification	Diversification of shareholder base: DRs allow issuers to diversify their shareholder base by attracting investors from different regions and markets.	Diversification of portfolio: Investing in DRs helps investors to diversify their portfolios by gaining exposure to companies in different regions and markets.
Connectivity	Access to U.S. capital markets: DRs provide issuers with access to U.S. capital markets, which is an important source of financing for companies seeking to expand their businesses.	Familiarity: DRs traded on U.S. exchanges are subject to U.S. regulations and accounting standards. DRs are more familiar and transparent to U.S. investors than foreign shares.
Cost Efficiency	Reduced administrative costs: By using DRs, issuers reduce administrative costs associated with cross-border transactions, such as currency conversion and settlement.	Trading cost efficiency: Trading DRs can be less expensive than trading foreign shares directly, due to lower transaction fees and fewer currency conversion costs.

SIZE OF THE DR MARKET

The growth of DRs has revolutionized global investing, giving investors convenient access to a broad range of companies across multiple sectors and regions. DRs solve for challenges that come with investing globally, such as settlement issues, currency conversion and unfamiliar market practices.

North America is the largest equity capital market opportunity globally, with a total Equity Assets Under Management (EAUM) of $65.2 trillion and $9.5 trillion invested in international companies. With 77% of all DR investment by value, North America also represents the most significant component of DR ownership, with over 4,500 institutional investors utilizing DRs for global diversification.

DRs are a key component for active investors' equity portfolios, with 83% of DR investment held in actively managed strategies. In fact, North American active investors alone hold $740 billion in DRs. As of 3Q25, the entire global DR market had grown to $1.2 trillion, held by 7,184 institutions.

The benefits of DRs are clear: They provide easy and convenient access to international equities, while offering a range of solutions to overcome common global investing challenges. So, whether you're an individual investor or an institutional investor, DRs are a powerful tool to help diversify your portfolio and maximize your returns in the global market.

MANAGED ACCOUNTS

Over the years, the growth of the DR universe has given investors convenient access to a broad range of companies across multiple sectors and regions. When diversifying globally, investors face settlement challenges, currency conversion, and unfamiliar market practices, but DRs can help them overcome these challenges.

For investment managers, implementing strategies across different investment vehicles is essential to meeting the needs of asset owners. Whether it's mutual funds, exchange-traded funds (ETFs), collective investment trusts (CITs) or separately managed accounts (SMAs), each vehicle presents unique advantages and challenges.

For international equity strategies, ADRs offer simplicity and cost efficiency. SMA portfolios, in particular, benefit from the use of ADRs, which provide a simple and effective way to track global institutional strategies. With DRs being DTC-eligible, and trading and paying dividends in USD, investment managers can simplify the holdings of non-U.S. companies in U.S.-based accounts, reducing the complexity of managing international equities.

By utilizing ADRs, investment managers can effectively replicate the top holdings of their mutual funds in SMA portfolios, with minimal tracking error. The size and scope of the ADR market is critical in achieving this goal, providing investment managers with a deep pool of liquidity to draw from and a broad range of companies to invest in. With their ease of use, cost efficiency, and broad market reach, ADRs provide a fundamental solution for building SMA portfolios that track global institutional strategies with precision and ease.

Below is an example of how the SMA product uses DRs to replicate the top 10 holdings of the Mutual Fund:

An SMA is a portfolio of securities owned directly by an investor and managed according to a specific discipline and/or style by a professional investment manager. Like mutual funds, SMAs offer professional portfolio management, but they also provide a number of features distinct from mutual funds such as:

- Portfolio Customization
- Tax Trading Optimization
- Transparent and Simplified Costs
